This December Nadine Kahanamoku will open the first All-American Surfing Championships at Huntington Beach, a spot Duke Kahanamoku called "the world citadel of surfing." As Honorary Chairperson of the sponsoring American Surfing Association, she will officially start the meet by putting a lei of Hawaiian orchids around a bust of her husband, then dropping a second lei into the ocean where women will compete and a third where men will surf. The event brings together for the first time college and high school surfers from Eastern, Western, Southern, and Pacific Conferences. It is ASA's hope to convince the Olympic Committee that surfing, not now an Olympic sport, is a must. . .
