HUSTACE BOYS SAVE THREE MORE LIVES AT WAIKIKI

Another life to the credit of the Hustace family and the members of The Outrigger Club is the record of Saturday afternoon when Harold Hustace and Henry Steiner rescued a drowning Jackie from the waves at Waikiki. This time the rescue was made from a canoe, Harold giving warning from the Moana pier and Henry going to the rescue in one of the Outrigger canoes. Harold would have used a surf board but recently one of the native boys "borrowed" the last board left at the Hustace place and broke it in the big surf. Mrs. Hustace has ordered another board that is to be kept for the exclusive use of life saving, and the Outrigger Club will see to it that the finest board on the beach is provided for that purpose.

It would be well, say the "Outrigger" officers, if the visiting fleets would assign one or two of their good swimmers to patrol the beach; for invariably during the visit of Naval vessels the Hustace boys are overworked saving Jackies from drowning, they are all thin.

The buoys marking the one deep spot at Waikiki have never been replaced. It is the intention of the Outrigger Club to make formal protest to the proper authorities.

Curtis Hustace saved a sailor's life Sunday afternoon, going out in a canoe. The sailor was in the deep spot. Another sailor got caught in the same place and was rescued by Curtis Hustace and Harry Steiner.
