Alexander Hume Ford, the writer and surf-board expert, is trying to form some sort of a canoeing club, with headquarters at a club-house on the beach. He maintains that surfing with both canoe and board is the greatest sport a man can find, and he would like to see some organized effort made here to develop it. With him when he came here this time on the Moana he brought a New Hibberdine native outrigger canoe, which he is taking out to the beach today. He intends to spend a great deal of his time in the water while he is here.
