

Outrigger Club Going Full Blast

On Saturday the Outrigger Club's chowder, which was held at the clubhouse, turned out to be a great success, notwithstanding the bad weather. Some fifty members sat down to the feast, and everything edible disappeared in short order.

Tables were set up in the dancing lanai, and a sail was hung to keep the wind and rain from coming in at one end. Kenneth Brown was in charge of things, and he certainly had a fine spread for the members. Alexander Hume Ford was in evidence, and he made a few remarks that were much appreciated by the surfboard enthusiasts. Brown also had something to say and he told of how the club was booming.

The new bathhouse is rapidly assuming the look of a fine building, and the floor is laid already. Within a few days the Outrigger Club will have a splendid place in which to prepare to swim, and afterwards to have a shower in.

Next Sunday the competitions for the Clark cups will take place, and a large number of entries are expected for the different events. All kinds of surfboard stunts will be performed, and the canoes will also be out on the job.

Cups will be given to the boys who bring their canoe in the furthest on a wave, and for the surfboards there will also be cups donated for trick-standing on the planks. Some of the boys are experts at coming in standing on their heads, and in some cases two individuals mount the same board and come in together.

On Saturday, February 12, the canoe races and general regatta will take place, as well as a repetition of the surfing contests. The big hundred-dollar silver cups will be contested for, and the winners can hold them for a year. The cups must be won three times before they become the property of any boy or man.

All members wishing to enter for the different events are requested to do so at once. Someone can be found at the clubhouse every afternoon to take entries, and it would be well for those who contemplate going in for the events to signify their intention as soon as possible.
