

CREWS WORKING HARD DAILY

Regatta Day is near at hand, and the clubs are working hard for the coming water sports. While the Myrtles, Healanis and Puunene crews are in constant training in the harbor every evening, the canoe crews out at the beach are also putting in some hard work with the paddles.

The Hui Nalu crew started training this week for the six-paddle canoe event, and it is using Prince Kuhio's canoe, while the Outrigger boys are working out in Wall's canoe. The Kona boys are out of it, and the Kam Aquatic crew may enter. With these three crews in the race it should turn out to be an exciting event.

The Ukulele crew is leaving no stone unturned, as it is determined to show the Myrtle bunch that there is a big difference between rowing and paddling.

The races this year will no doubt turn out to be the best seen in Honolulu harbor for many years. The two boat clubs are working harder than ever, and the local sports are turning out in larger numbers to see the crews practise.

Last evening a launch captained by Eben Low took a party around the harbor to watch the crews at work. Dick Sullivan is rowing with the Healanis seniors at No. 3, and it looks as though he is with the lucky bunch this year. Captain Cunha is still in the game with the Healanis, and Bill Lyle, captain of the Myrtle crew, is another oldtimer still in the races.

The races this year will be very close, and there is no telling which crew will win until the day of the races.
