

OUTRIGGER PLANS

BIG RACING YEAR

Enthusiasts Meet to Revive the Aquatic Sports That Made Club Famous.

With its face set against any form of professionalism the Outrigger Club will again take up active water athletics. Already crews are being organized for Regatta Day, and a number of canoes will then be sent down to the harbor, conditional, according to the club officers, on the association in charge of the events making good its promises not to give any cash prizes.

In any event the Outrigger Club will pull off a number of canoeing and surfing stunts at Waikiki during the year.

A hui in the club has pledged itself to raise a thousand dollars to be spent on new canoes.

Last night on the Outrigger grounds several of the moving spirits of the club met to plan operations. Marston Campbell, Jr., pledged the cooperation of the club members between sixteen and twenty-one, and Joseph B. Stickney promised that the juniors would rally with him to make Honolulu once more realize that the Outrigger Club is full of good juvenile timber.

A. B. Kroll, the oarsman, will turn his attention next year to canoeing and will organize a crew of seniors for future events. Several get-together dinners will be given.
