There has been a rumor around for some time of organizing a new club for general pleasure among a certain set of the Four Hundred. The plan on foot is to have the club grounds face the sea, or at least to have enough water frontage to have a bath house. The idea is also to have golf links of nine or more holes; and a one mile race course, which could be used for motor spurts or thoroughbred horses, is also in the minds of those interested.

The idea of the club is to have some place to go which members feel is exclusive, where congenial sets may join in a bridge game, a set of tennis, or a foursome on the links.

The need of such a club is strongly felt, for the Country Club during the cool winter months, when one is keen for athletic sports, is decidedly overcrowded, and the University Club has almost turned into an army and navy club, and, as everyone knows, the membership of the Outrigger Club is full to the limit.

Another club, such as is planned, will fill a long felt want. Out beyond Diamond Head is an exceptionally good tract of land on which an option has already been given.
