

Harvard Style Of Football In Sunday Grid Go

Honolulu fans will get an opportunity Sunday to see two football teams, coached in the Harvard style of play, come together, when the Waikikis meet the Outriggers at Moiliili park at 3 o'clock. And it is not as if the two teams were coached by merely Harvard men of mediocre talent for J. Atherton Gilman was an All-American selection from Harvard in 1915 and Paul Withington is one of the noted all-around athletes of the Cambridge university.

The Outriggers have been coached by Withington, whose master hand has also been in evidence at Puna-hou where the Buff and Blue squad took the interscholastic championship. Withington has been putting the surfriders through the paces in daily workouts and has made, according to report, a well-oiled machine that is ready to give any team in the islands a run for the money. Withington is also playing on the team and with Chester Langenstein of Northwestern university and many of last year's team men, the Outriggers are hard, fast and tricky.

The Waikikis are not lacking in stars. With J. Atherton Gilman leading them and playing end, the beachcombers are confident that they will make a clean sweep of everything. Besides Gilman there is Galligan, a former mainland college star, Braly an Olympic club star and men like "Buck" Aarona and "Piper" Rodrigues.

It Will Be Good

No matter which team wins, the fans may rest assured that it will be a brilliant and hard battle. While the pre-season dope conceded the Waikikis as the strongest team, the Outriggers are given to putting forth surprises.

The major civilian league season will open Saturday with the University of Hawaii and Palama coming together. The game Sunday will be the second game of the season.
