

DOPSTERS PICKING SURFERS TO SPRING SURPRISE UPON CONFIDENT WAIKIKI OUTFIT

Football dopesters in Honolulu have just about agreed that the team which wins the game Sunday at Mollili field, between the Outriggers and Waikikis, will be the team that will be stacked up against the University of Nevada on New Year's Day.

The Palamas have a strong team, but it is not reckoned as being a factor in the tussle. The Waikikis, according to all the early season dope, have the best outfit, but football dopesters who have watched the Waikikis and Outriggers in action against other teams declare that the Outriggers have more than an even chance to win the Sunday mele.

A Machine

As one dopester put it, the Waikikis are a collection of stars, while the Outriggers are a machine. And what is more, this dopester declares that the Outrigger machine is some well-oiled one and will ramble right along to victory.

Up to two weeks ago, it would have taken a fine tooth comb to find a single dopester giving the Outriggers even a chance to play a tie game with the beachcombers, but the odds are swinging the other way now.

Besides Withington of Harvard and Langenstein of Northwestern, the Outriggers will have Jack Slade of Coe college and Hicks, formerly of the College of Hawaii. Slade is reported to be one of the most dangerous men in uniform.

The Waikikis besides Atherton Gilman of Harvard, have Galligan of Vanderbilt. Galligan is tricky, fast and full of surprises.

Spirit

Players on local teams which have scrimmaged both the Waikikis and the Outriggers are agreed that where the Waikikis have a strong team of stars, the Outriggers have "the spirit" that makes for victory. All this dope favoring the Outriggers, on top of the fact that the Waikikis have been early season choice, indicates that the fans have in store a real football treat at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon at Mollili field.
