

LET TEAM THAT WINS TITLE PLAY NEVADA U

The following letter, received yesterday by the sporting editor, undoubtedly reflects the sentiments of a large number of football fans:

Sports Editor, The Advertiser.

Dear Sir: What's the big idea behind the apparent desire on the part of some of our football fans to stack an all-star team against the Nevadas?

The University of Nevada isn't one of the big leading colleges of the mainland; it hasn't a regiment of husky students to draw from, and I don't think it would be quite the fair thing to collect all the best players in Hawaii to meet them on the grid.

The Nevada team comes here at the invitation of the University of Hawaii—an institution about on a par with the western college—and naturally expects to meet players of about an equal ability.

Personally I believe we should give the visiting boys a square deal, and it is my opinion that any one of the four teams now playing here is fully capable of taking care of the best that the University of Nevada can bring along.

Let the original plan go through as the winner of our Honolulu League is by all means entitled to the honor of meeting the visitors. The Palama, Outrigger, and Waikiki clubs have been fighting all season with this honor in view and whichever one of them wins the championship should not be robbed of the opportunity of playing as a unit in what it is hoped will be the real classic of the season.

Yours very truly,
"SPORT."

With only a few more weeks of football before us, interest in sport will be maintained at its close by attention being focussed on New Zealand where the Davis Cup will be battled for on the tennis courts. America is sending one of the most powerful tennis teams that ever has represented the Stars and Stripes, and yet there is no certainty that they will win the coveted trophy. Both Tilden and Johnston have shown erratic streaks of late, and it will depend largely on the mood they are in when they compete as to the results.
