

World's Champ Knits Sweater For Norm Ross

Duke Kahanamoku Has Hard Time With Red Cross Chop Sticks But Keeps On

---

Duke Kahanamoku is going after another championship. He is the leading swimmer of the world; he can handle an oar with the best in the business, and now he is going after the knitting honors. Neptune's favorite son is knitting a sweater for Norman Ross. Get that!

Two months ago Duke took this first stitch for a joke, when his sister was knitting for the boys at the front. Duke started out with the Red Cross chop sticks in a real manner. He fell down on the turns, but it interested him, and he still kept on. "No trouble at all" said the champion, when he finished his first hour's work. He accomplished seven stitches out of 92 attempts.

But Duke continued the work, and finally he was making the turns in excellent shape. In his spare time he tackled the work and got in the semi-finals. Then he tackled a real job. He announced that he would make a sweater for Norman Ross, the world's champion long distance swimmer. Duke didn't pick out any little man for his tryout, and those who know how large the "Big Moose" is, realize what Duke has started out to do. He expects to have the sweater completed within a few days and it will be shipped to the Olympian.
