

Perry McGillivray Beats Duke In the Two-Twenty

Mainland Merman Establishes
New World's Record — Kahanamoku Wins 50-Yard Dash

CHICAGO, July 14—(Associated Press)—Perry M. McGillivray, who is now stationed at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, defeated Duke P. Kahanamoku here last night in a meet held as a benefit for the American Red Cross Society.

With the world famous Hawaiian merman second, McGillivray made the two hundred and twenty yards swim in two minutes and twenty-one and two-fifths seconds. This time broke the existing world's record for the distance.

The water was apparently too cold or the distance was too great for the Hawaiian marvel.

Kahanamoku won the fifty-yard dash, making the distance in twenty-three and four-fifths seconds.

The world's record for the 220-yard distance, tank, is held by H. J. Hebner, his time being two minutes and twenty-one seconds, flat. Perry McGillivray holds the open water world's record for the distance, his time being two minutes and twenty-four and one-fifth seconds.

Duke Kahanamoku's world's record for the fifty-yard dash, tank, is twenty-three and two-fifths seconds, while his world's record for the same distance, made in open water, is twenty-three seconds flat.

While the Associated Press despatch to The Advertiser is silent as to whether the two swimming races were held in a tank or in open water, it is judged from the times made, that they were in open water. The two-twenty has never been considered Kahanamoku's distance. He remains king of all mermen in the fifty and 100-yard distances and the midway stations thereof.

Perry McGillivray, who defeated Hawaii's great swimmer last night in Chicago, is well and favorably known in Honolulu, where he has swum on a number of occasions.
