HAWAII AT THE OLYMPIC GAMES

Hawaii's showing at the Olympic swimming tournament has been impressive, though hopes that Miss Mariechen Wehselau would capture the 100-meter championship in the feminine division have been shattered.

Duke Kahanamoku we regard as still our own Duke, though he is swimming for Los Angeles. But he is a true son of Hawaii, learned his swimming exclusively here, and his performance in coming second to the "phenom" Weissmuller will be hailed as another feather in Hawaii's helmet.

Duke Kahanamoku has been an Olympic champion for 12 years. No other swimmer approaches such a record. It is an unusually long period for an athlete to reign supreme in any branch of sport. And "the Duke" is far from "through" now. He may yet come back to something like his best form and capture western or even national championships. Whether he swims for Hawaii or Los Angeles or some other club, we hope so.

Warren Kealoha and all the others in the Hawaii team have performed creditably. They have been worthy representatives of their island country and of the United States whose colors they bear abroad. When they return, we shall have the opportunity to demonstrate our appreciation.
