SWIMMING

times were clocked under AAU regulations and will go down as official for the distances.

Open event swimmers started near the Castle surf, a distance of about 1 1/4 miles from the finish line in front of the Royal Hawaiian. The shorter races were started in the open water straight out from shore.

Duke Present

Outrigger canoes were used to transport the contestants to the starting points. The finish line was marked by a rope which was fastened at one end to an anchored canoe, and fastened to shore at the other. All swimmers were required to pass under the rope to finish.

Duke Kahanamoku was prominent among the officials, helping in the launching of transport canoes and in timing. Theodore (Pump) Searle was manager of the events. Among his assistants were Dad Center, who put on a bathing suit and braved the elements to referee the races, and Al Simmons, who started the races from a speed boat anchored out from shore.

For the men's open race, the Hui Makani swimmers misunderstood the starter's instructions and were not present when the gun went off. Had they been in the race they might have boosted their total of points.

According to Searle, this open swim will probably become an annual Turkey Day event. He said that next year he expected many of this year's novice entries to be entered in the regular races.
