

Surfing On Lighted Waves Is Colorful Aloha to Fleet

The Time—9 o'clock last night.

The Place—The beach at Waikiki and its white-capped running surf, blazing in mid-afternoon brilliance.

But it wasn't afternoon, nor was there sunshine at the beach last night—only the incandescence of Fort Ruger and Fort De Russy spotlights—when 50 of Hawaii's best surf-riders and outrigger canoeists, led by Duke Kahanamoku, did their stuff off the Outrigger Canoe club in a fitting Hawaiian aloha to the fleet.

A drizzling rain failed to dampen the spirits of the thousands of spectators who lined the shores, or the many surfers sliding in the curl of Hawaii's famous breakers, in a demonstration of a sport known in no other place in the world.

The spots, furnished through the courtesy of the army, silhouetted the brown bodies of the surfers against the silver water, bringing a clear picture of the aquatic sports to the spectators in spite of the rain and clouds.

Leading performers in the aquatic spectacle were champion surf boarder Panama Dave, Chick Daniels, Sam Colgate, Sally Hale, John Makua, Wilbur Craw, Mark Westgate and Waldo Bowman. Malihini surfers from the Outrigger club also took part.

Preceding the exhibition, the Outrigger Canoe club gave a beach supper for 400 members and invited guests, many of whom were officers of the fleet being entertained by private parties. Hot dogs, salad, coffee and beer were served before members donned swimming trunks to take part in the festivities by manning outrigger canoes.

In charge of the party and show was Ernest Stenberg, who was assisted by a large committee. Hawaiian music by Bill Prestige and his Happy Lads furnished dancing on the lanai of the club house following the water sports.
