A picturesque and colorful painting of the H. M. S. Blonde at Honolulu, 1825, by A. T. Manookian is illustrated on the frontispiece of the October issue of "Paradise of the Pacific."

Walter Macfarlane, president of the Outrigger Canoe club, sketches the history of the club from the time that it was a grass shack in 1908 to the contemplated modern clubhouse of 1940 in his article, "More and Better Sports for Waikiki." He writes that "In the one word, tradition, is summed up all that the Outrigger club means to Hawaii. More than thirty years ago the tradition came into being, when Alexander Hume Ford and his associates dedicated themselves to the perpetuation of the ancient sports of the royal Hawaiians."
