

Canoe Paddling Proposed To Keep Gridders In Trim

Harry Field, head coach of the Healani football team, thinks football the year around.

The former Punahou Academy, University of Hawaii, Oregon State, and Chicago Cardinal star lineman, has thought up a novel way of keeping football players in condition during the summer months.

He and the Healani club have proposed canoe paddling races for the gridgers and he reports that besides the Healanis, at least three clubs are interested. They are the Outriggers, Hui Nalus, and the University of Hawaii.

It is planned to stage dual meets each week-end, starting in May and end up with a big regatta either on June 11 or July 4.

According to Field, rowing would toughen up the football players.

He figures that the boys would be given about a month of rest after the summer rowing grind and when September rolls around they will be ready to swing into regular football training.
