

A PARTY Honolulu won't forget in a hurry was the grand opening of the Outrigger, under Jack Bowden's expert management . . . Chris Holmes was baffled when he discovered his favorite beach entrance to the club had been fenced up . . . and he had to go around the front . . . also baffled was Admiral, Willie Whittle's familiar Waikiki tail-wagger, who begged judiciously for food on the other side of the fence . . . he was surreptitiously silenced by a bit of steak from Helen Corbett's plate . . . the party ended on a frenzied note with the entire 500 guests joining in The Congo, led by Andy Anderson . . .
