

WAIKIKI BEACH 1942 STYLE: Sunbathing these days at Waikiki has a catch in it in the form of double aprons of barbed wire strung the entire beach length for protection against a possible enemy landing. Bathers either climb over or around the wire for their dally dip. In the background is the Royal Hawaiian hotel, recently taken over by the navy as a service recreation center.—Allan Campbell photo.