Kailua Annex Club Under Discussion As Outrigger Site

Plans for a branch of the Outrigger Canoe club on the site occupied by the Kailua Annex of the Pearl Harbor commissioned officers club on Kalama beach, were in the "discussion" stage it was learned here Tuesday.

Residents of Kailua were being approached as to interest in the Outrigger annex, and inquiry made into the re-zoning problems as well as a suitable building.

THE PROPERTY is owned by Harold K. Castle who has leased it to the navy. On June 3, fire swept through the main building of the club and it was in only limited use until Sept. 28, when the navy closed the area permanently. At that time Rear Admiral Stuart S. Murray, commandant, 14th naval district, said construction costs of a new building would be "too high to be practical."

BUILDING replacement at that time was estimated at about $40,000 by the insurance firm which handled the claim. Just how far Outrigger Canoe club will go in constructing a like building was not learned. The original club was built by Seabees during World War II and was visited by nearly every top ranking official who passed through Hawaii.

The lease held by the navy from Harold K. Castle expires this month, it is understood.
